

End Exploitation: An Immersive Experience

Domestic Servitude Station Follow-up

People who find themselves in domestic servitude – forced to work in private homes cooking, cleaning, washing laundry, taking care of children – are particularly vulnerable to exploitation as they are kept behind closed doors.

Pay is often very low, or non-existent, with wage payments frequently delayed or withheld, and they're often expected to work incredibly long hours. Many are refused permission to leave the house, subjected to violence, threats and withholding of paperwork, or not allowed contact with loved ones.

In many countries, domestic labour is not recognised as work, with many domestic workers regarded as 'help' – especially children from rural areas who are sent to urban households

From Domestic Servitude by The Freedom Fund

More Resources (click on the title to be directed to the resource):

Sofia's Story

PBS News Hour: How Human Traffickers Trap Women into Domestic Servitude

Can You See Me video from A21

Michigan Domestic Servitude Case

**Special thank you to Survivor Consultant Kwami Adobe-Herrera for his leadership, expertise, and direction throughout this entire project. We are grateful!*